Novel Sucralose Process to Rival Tate & Lyle

FOR RELEASE

INDIANAPOLIS, IN, April 21, 2008 – Lexington Pharmaceuticals Laboratories, LLC (Lexington) announced today that it has developed a unique method of producing sucralose that will rival Tate & Lyle's Splenda in the worldwide sucralose market. The Lexington process is believed to be more environmentally friendly than other known processes and, according to the company, is expected to be less expensive to produce.

Lexington, which is owned by Indianapolis businessman Ted Gelov, has filed patent applications on its novel manufacturing process. Mr. Gelov is also the owner of Heartland Sweeteners, LLC, which is a leading manufacturer and marketer of table top sweeteners.

Lexington has relationships and agreements that will allow the Lexington Sucralose to be manufactured domestically in the United States and at other sites around the world under pharmaceutical GMP (Good Manufacturing Practice) conditions.
